Data Submitted (UTC 11): 1/11/2020 2:47:40 AM
First name: Fisher
Last name: Armour
Organization:
Title:
Comments: Due to the "preservation" of forests such as these we see a canopy over the ground that once had under brush for turkeys to brood in as well as a food source for white tail. As we can see not only the dwindling of deer populations but turkey as well as the rare grouse. Secondly, when you stare across the mountains in the spring time it's a lush green landscape. All except a few brown spots. The Wooly Adelgid has put a major dint in the population of hemlocks all throughout the Appalachian mountains and this is an insect that needs to be dealt with. I think this would be very beneficial not only to the wildlife but for Hunters and all that enjoy the out doors. As an active outdoorsman thank you.