Comments: Cancel the Valle Seco Land Exchange

Dear Becca Smith,

Shades of the late 1800s, when, through whatever means they could get away with, the robber barons stole public lands for their own! This proposed "trade" is little different from the machinations of those crooks. To even consider giving away this shared wilderness worthy land to be the personal playground of some fat cat is deplorable as well as shortsighted. While we're used to seeing the U.S. Forest Service act more like a timber broker than the overseer of our forests' health, I should think that those of you in a position to make the decision on this trade should be capable of seeing how wrong it is, and to do the right thing, regardless of any pressure that might come to bear from the Current Administration. I'd like to address you with a bit more respect but the disrespect that this plan has for the land, the critters that utilize it, and for the American public, makes that impossible. Below is a more polite presentation of the (obvious to many) arguments against this proposed land grab. Please do the right thing by canceling any further action on this misguided "plan"...who knows? you may sleep better.

I'm writing to ask you to seriously reconsider and ultimately cancel the proposed Valle Seco Land Exchange. I object to the disposal of wilderness-quality roadless lands right next to the South San Juan Wilderness. And I'm opposed to any loss of public access to the San Juan River - or loss of protections for what's been formally recommended as a wild and scenic river.

As you know the South San Juan Wilderness is among Colorado's most pristine areas, and the adjacent roadless lands in question have been proposed for wilderness designation for more than 20 years. The San Juan National Forest previously deemed wilderness designation unnecessary because the lands were protected under the Colorado Roadless Rule. So it would be a betrayal now to turn around and give away these wilderness-quality public lands just because a billionaire wants them.

What's more, in 2013 the East Fork of the San Juan River was recommended by the Forest Service for protection as a wild and scenic river - after decades of advocacy by anglers, boaters and other river supporters. So again, it violates the public's trust to reverse course and privatize this public resource.

It's also unacceptable to give away a stretch of the only public access to the San Juan River upstream of Pagosa Springs. Access to rivers is a growing concern in Colorado, recently highlighted by Colorado Gov. Jared Polis. It's an enormous step backward to take away existing public access for no other reason than to please someone who lives out of state.

Given the controversial nature of eliminating wilderness-quality roadless areas and recommended wild and scenic rivers for private benefit, this proposed land exchange must be cancelled.

If the Forest Service does go forward, the proposal must be analyzed rigorously in an environmental impact statement because the harms would be significant and contrary to the public interest. And the process must be completely open. The public deserves full transparency and the same access to decision-makers and documents as the lawyers and lobbyists enjoy.

Finally, if the overriding purpose of the project is acquisition of Valle Seco for the value of its big-game wildlife habitat, then a more feasible and widely supported approach is for the Forest Service to simply purchase the 880-acre Valle Seco property using the Land and Water Conservation Fund, which Congress is moving to permanently fund at $900 million per year.

Please - do the right thing and cancel this project, keeping these public lands in public hands.

Sincerely,

Lawry Sager
