Comments: Overall, the plan looks good with the two following exceptions. 1. A vet should be on site at all times during capture - whether through bait or helicopter. 2. Oversight of the plan and future action should not be left in the control of the forestry service supervisor (as the forestry service has always been against allowing the wild horses and are thus extremely biased) but rather under the supervision and control of an advisory board that includes environmentalists, equine vets, equine advocacy groups and members of the general public.
