Comments: Removal and stockpiling or sale of any kind is not a management plan. Restrictions of acres the wild horses are allowed to roam (fencing) is not a management plan and will force the horses to overgraze that small area, so you will say "overpopulation" and we must remove more. Water sources are another concern.
There are 10's of thousands of acres in the Forest for the horses to clean up to help prevent fires, as proven by scientific studies. Has birth control been considered for your "plan"? Many advocacy groups in several states have been working with the federal government on this type of plan which is working! It is less costly than roundups and holding pens. And the question is "what do you do with all the Captured horses?
Please go back to the drawing board and consider other options. Visitors to your great state love seeing the wild horses if they are lucky enough to come across them. They don't seem to be overpopulated because it isn't often that you can find them. Or maybe we just weren't in the right place.
