Comments: Wild horses are our heritage/history. They belong to all of us. And a good deal of the time are on land that belongs to all of us. From all the pictures I have seen, they are healthy and strong. Many efforts to round them up are cruel and inhumane. Many are unnecessary. We seem to have come to a particular type of "management" that is solely at the direction and wishes of local cattle ranchers who want to graze their cattle on said public lands. It seems there is always money involved or, at least, the influence and pressure that money /votes can buy. It also seems that the voices and knowledge of those who know the wild horse bands and who advocate for them are not the ones that are listened to, or even acknowledged. The voices (and money and votes) that are heard and heeded are the cattlemen. The whole subject of our wild horses is marked with greed, money changing hands, votes promised. It seems the horses, the public lands, and the feelings/desires of most people are ignored. And the opinions and wishes of a few greedy cattlemen/associations are what is heard and adhered to - at all costs. Unfair. Un-American. Inhumane.
