Comments: The wild horses are an American icon and main attraction for the state of Arizona. Thousands of tourists come to Arizona every year to see these horse's magnificent beauty in their natural surroundings. The economic impact will most likely be felt if they are not allowed to stay on the land. They should be allowed to continue existing in their environment without limiting sources of food, water and an adequate area to roam. Furthermore, "thinning the herd" or limiting the number of horses would not allow for enough genetic diversity in the bands, ultimately leading to loss of all wild horses in that area.
