Comments: All horses and burros that run loose in the United States of America are feral. The science has confirmed this unequivocally. All of these feral horses now compete with our actual wildlife. They compete for food. There is recent documentation that they not only compete for water, but they also chase away wild life from water sources even after the horses have received their fill. These feral horses deserve no special protections in my view. The idea to limit they grazing area is a good start. I would like to see the stallions darted and castrated as further step reduce the herd size.. We need to give the true wildlife the best opportunity to survive.
