Comments: The wild horses in Arizona can be traced back to spanish Andalusian horses which helped Cortez to conquer Mexico. Wild horses have been apart of Arizona's history for hundreds of years before Arizona was even a state. While I understand the need for cattle grazing along with having to balance the environment and manage it for a multitude of species, however an animal with the history behind it as the Arizona wild horse should be given greater respect and allowed their current lifestyle. Removing them from their habitat and separating herds can cause significant emotional trauma to horses especially young ones because horses are such social animals. The plan states that you wish to adopt them out but if you can't you would destroy them as humanely as possible. How is it fair to the animal or the environment to kill an animal just because it's location is undesirable to us, who are invading their environment making them undesirable.
