Comments: Once again we see governmental powers kowtow to ranchers. We all know how this works. Input is solicited from the public, yes. But the decisions have already been made. These beautiful creatures are doomed. I am furious about this situation. It's a crime to kill these horses, but no one will ever be prosecuted. I'm certain there are many leads that will never be run down.

How difficult would it be to carve out and protect a small section of land for these horses (not to mention, all other species)? Are we really so cowardly that we cannot stand up to these ranchers? What gives us the right to extinguish these remaining wild animals? Who are we that we cannot part with a small piece of land to save these wild horses?

Who will stand up for these horses?
