Comments: I do not agree with culling any wild herd of horses and burros. They are American icons, tourist attractions and they were here before the cattle were. I am tired of public lands being designated for huge cattle operations at the risk of nearly destroying long established wild horses and burro herds. There are millions of acres of federal land in most states and only a few small herds of wild equines using them. Let the cattle barons lease land that does not infringe on the wild herd's migrating territory and leave our herds alone! With natural predators also using public lands nature will cull these herds as was intended not man. Our world today is a mess and it is all because of human interference with nature which had the perfect balance for all creations before we humans got greedy and decided governments could better handle things nature had already done perfectly. Leave the horses, burros, wolves and buffalo alone to roam as nature intended. Any cattle baron's wants should come second to the animals that were here first. After all thanks to man and importing cattle we now have brucellosis which was not here before the cattle.
