Comments: It is important to maintain wild horses in their natural and usual habitat. Eradication of the wild horses is not acceptable. Hopefully, adoption will result in an adequate reduction of the population when it reaches a naturally unsustainable level.

If this is not the case, the means of disposing of "excess" animals is concerning. What would be the humane method of euthanizing those who aren't adopted? What would the timeframe allowed and method of offering horses for adoption?

Under no circumstances should these animals be made available for slaughter- at any facility, in or outside of the United States.
