Comments: I have a concern regarding the fencing off of land where the wild horses will not be allowed to "free-roam" as stated in the document.
If confined to a small area, of course that will put stress on the land. But, that stress is due to human intervention; installing fences. When left alone to truly roam freely, the horses actually help the forest by keeping the floor clear and by reseeding areas with green grass to keep fires down.
I feel the plan still needs work. Management is the key word.
