Comments: I find this whole exercise to be based on a myth, that these are true wild horses. Before the 2002 Redeo/Chidiski fire, I cannot remember seeing any horses around Heber to Show Low, except for a few stock animals. After the fire and the subsequent burning of the reservation fence, many feral indian horses crossed over onto the A/S forest. We now see the affect of this event with many bands of horses from Heber to Sow Low. These feral horses are damaging are forest and creating problems for the wildlife in the area. The solution in my opinion is to round the horses up and either give them back to the Indians or put them up for adoption. While many misguided people think the horses are cute to look at and somehow bring allusions of the old west, they really pose a long term hazard to forest health.
