

Data Submitted (UTC 11): 3/13/2020 7:07:09 PM

First name: Cody

Last name: Weagant

Organization:

Title:

Comments: Look no further than the Navajo Nation to see what happens when domesticated animals such as horses are allowed to roam "free."

The Wild Horses have no natural predator, if the herds kept growing the lands would become bare. The horses would end up faced with starvation and so would the elk and deer.

Horses are much harder on the forest land than cattle and the other native animals.

The horses have no way to make it through the winter in higher elevation forest land. That is why stockmen must move their cattle herds from Forest Service lands before the winter.