Comments: Over the past few decades it has become horribly clear that the "tree hugger" lobby is more interested in preventing healthy forest use - including logging - than actually promoting healthy forests. The western states have been inundated with tremendous wildfires as a result. I believe it to be of the utmost importance to allow the Forest Service to manage the forests as intended and keep the judges and politicians out of that of which they know so little. Logging is sound management. Wildfires that result from overgrowth and ignorance is not.
