Comments: Comment on the proposed revised NPCL forest plan

I have used the NPCL and adjacent national forests for recreation extensively for the past 40 years. From I-90 to the north, to Yellow Pine to the south, much of my time near the Idaho-Montana border. In places by car, but much by bicycle and hiking I feel fortunate to have had the time to explore this area; something new to appreciate around just about every corner.

I am concerned that the Forest Plan seems to lower the level of protection for non-motorized recreation and habitat, as well as not considering the effects of anthropomorphically caused climate change.

The need for non-motorized recreational opportunities is increasing. It is important that the Forest Plan recognize this. More protection is needed, not less.

I advise that you not only look at the short term economics, but the additionally look and the long term needs of our country.

Thank you, Scott Cornelius
