Comments: I urge the Forest Service to follow the 2012 Colorado Roadless law and to not permit destructive development in the HD Mountain region. While pipelines may offer cheaper and more efficient transport of mineral resources, the benefit that this provides to the American public cannot compare to the benefits, both present and future, of preserving wilderness areas such as this. The costs of ongoing development of these areas, which include species impacts, ecology impacts, and reduction in the already shrinking amounts of wilderness we will leave to future generations, are immeasurable in the long term. I urge the Forest Service not to succumb to short-term thinking, but to act as responsible stewards who maximize the present and future value of the lands they have been entrusted with, and reject the Petrox Northern Extension pipeline in keeping with their mandate from Congress and the laws designed to preserve America's wilderness. Thank you for your service.
