Comments: I demand that the public's voices be heard on the proposal to begin large scale logging along the Nooksack. The plan to destroy our regions most sacred resources for corporate profits is a disgrace In a time of devastating climate change. The beautiful Northwest is an air filter for the rest of the country's polluted landscape. Beyond the sacred importance of our Native peoples it holds spiritual connections for most people of the PNW. Science is now proving the healing properties our forests provide us. Given the amount of pollution, disease, and general emotional stress of this modern day, we should be preserving these most basic protectors of the environment. You will not be taking just trees, but every species that relies on the shelter and food they provide. The forest is connected through a vast network of a symbiotic community of roots and fungi that could have devastating consequences far beyond the last line of trees that are destroyed.
