Comments: Clearly the verbiage attempting to justify this project is purposely misleading. Are we to believe this is a carefully formulated plan whose intention is to improve huckleberry growth and preserve spotted owl habitat? Please...

An honest plan would simply say, we are going to remove xxx amount of timber over xxx miles of forest because we believe the short term gains of selling timber outweigh the long term interests of the community and the critical global need to RESTORE forest.

Historically, the forest service has simply allowed clear cutting timber to be its GoTo management plan. Other countries like Germany have managed to create sustainable forestry practices by selectively and thoughtfully grooming its forest. Nowhere in the entire country of Germany do you see the open exposed scarring of the landscape that we see everywhere in the great PNW.

Stop the toxic practice of clear cutting and learn how to do your job ...our survival depends on it.
