Comments: Please don't. This area is beautiful and the ecosystems it house are beautiful and varied. It is an exquisite rainforest and a plan that involves cutting such an unusually large area without first doing an Environmental Impact Statement would be negligent. Logging these forests without an alternative carbon sequestration plan already active would be a crime against the planet. The forests protect the area from fire, landslides and floods, and the disgusting logging roads that scar the mountains are not only an eye sore but they also disrupt sensitive wildlife habitats and serve as a transmission vector for invasive species. I understand the need for timber, but surely you can think of some creative ways to harvest lumber while maintaining the beauty and integrity of the forest and it's land.
