Comments: This is a horribly upsetting initiative. The Homestake Wilderness provides an unparalleled opportunity for connecting with nature. To disrupt this ecosystem for the benefit of humans who live hundreds of miles away is inexcusable. While mighty and robust, this area is also incredibly fragile. The animals and landscape have finely tuned this area for countless years to create the perfect home for hundreds of species. This is one of the most sacred, untouched areas in all of Colorado, and in the United States as a whole. For the visitors who seek refuge in this area, it means the world. The thought of drills and heavy machinery destroying such a sacred piece of land is nightmarish. As a state that promotes the love and care of wilderness, this would be a direct contradiction. It is the responsibility of the Park Rangers of Colorado to protect these vulnerable, untouched lands, and I beg of the strongest effort to extinguish this atrocity of an idea.
