Comments: I think that it is absurd to move forward with any water projects that continue to remove water from the West side of the divide and place it on the East. I understand that the Front Range population is growing and that with that there is more need for essential resources such as water. However, to continue to suck water from the West side of the divide while we water lawns (very frequently sidewalks and roadways too) is absurd. We need to modify our behavior to better handle our water consumption before we have the right to ask for any more. We in the Front Range frequently act like we don't live in a high plains desert. It is time for us to be forced to start acting like it before we request more water be taken away from those downstream all for the sake of an absurd concept of what good landscaping looks like.
