Comments: I live downstream from the proposed gold mine on the south fork, on the main stem Salmon. What happens upstream always ends up in the river at Riggins. It's hard to even fathom why anyone would consider the idea of a large mine project anywhere near this beautiful river system. One of America's great natural waterways. Is the money worth destroying the beauty of the south fork? Or endangering those downstream? Its already known that Canadian business will be enriched.Why would those folks care about one of America's last great wild rivers? I submit the area and downstream on the Salmon are to important the way they are now to consider Pit mining anywhere near this great American treasure. Canada can mine their own waterways if they want to destroy them. Not ours! Concerned Idaho citizen.. Greg Morris
