Do the appropriate thing by considering the area as a whole eco-system.

Condescend to use a similar plan as the Park Service, who has developed a handicapped accessible, removable port-a-potty system in an appropriate location at South Fork.

Be conscious of the protected habitat of the spotted owl.

You need not construct a new structure for educational purposes if the school children as well supervised.

Augment environmental education at an area already used in the main canyon.

Open Idlewild Campground as a day use area, and use their toilet, tables and parking area.

Consider occasional placement of wooden benches dispensed throughout the area where people might rest and enjoy the quiet.

Consider soft road-closures in early spring.

Place a handicapped-access trail in a logical place--not in a flood plain--and do not destroy habitat when doing so.

And lastly, if you do not have funding to do it right, do not do it! Who in his right mind would suggest a development that would destroy beauty and habitat, and promise to destroy it all if he doesn't have money for upkeep.

Work with the Chiricahua Regional Council who know something about the area.
