Comments: ebikes are a different animal and a different experience/intention to mountain biking. If ebikes are allowed they will need their own trails or at the very least their own etiquette and/or trail direction. ebikes climb trails significantly faster and create accident and injury opportunities for both ebiker and human powered mountain biker. This is especially true on trails difficult enough to be primarily downhill direction for human powered mountain bikes. I respect that ebikes afford opportunities to the less fit and disabled but I see trouble on the trails in the form of conflict and injury. If they are approved and a can't beat 'em join 'em follows, who wants to be the last human powered mountain biker on those trails?
