Comments: This appears to be an unnecessarily additional stress to an area already under stress. My concerns are about the animals that live on or near the area. It is one thing to have humans skiing and another to have vehicles and tracks. It is too bad that the Sandias were not left in their natural state, but adding more vehicles and equipment makes things worse. What are the noise and sound levels that the wildlife will have to endure? I'm concerned that this additional equipment will affect the wildlife's reproductive lives, their habitats, their prey base and possibly push them farther into the human occupied areas of our mountains. In case I need to state it, I am against this proposal.
