Comments: I have been riding an eBike for the last year. As a person who has struggled with asthma my entire life, the eBike allows me to keep up with my younger and/or healthier friends and family members who are riding traditional (non-electric assisted) mountain bikes. I do not feel as though eBikes are really that much different on trails, honestly. My riding is not really faster going downhill or through corners or bumpy terrain. The only place I see a difference is when I'm climbing a hill, or if I'm going for a long distance ride. I believe that eBikes are a wonderful innovation that allows more people to enjoy the great outdoors. From what I can tell, my eBike does not create any more damage than any other traditional bicycle. I fully support opening all USFS trails to eBike use, as long as those trails are open to all other forms of motorized and/or mechanized travel. Thank you.
