Comments: I have been mountain biking for 25 years and for most of them have also been an advocate. I've served on the International Mountain Bicycling Associations's Regional Leadership Council and the board of directors for MORE, the DC/Baltimore region's mountain bicycling club.

First, these are not bicycles, they are two wheeled motorized vehicles. The power these motors produce is roughly three times what a human can produce. These vehicles could help alleviate traffic in urban areas and be a great way to get commuters out of cars. However, they are wholly inappropriate for back country trails designed for hikers, equestrians, or mountain bikers. Allowing them where other motorized vehicles are allowed seems to make sense.
