Comments: I love Alaska. I love the trails we have that allow us to ride bikes deep into the backcountry. Resurrection pass and devils, Johnson's and lost lake, and crescent lake. I have ridden them all a few times a year for 20 years. I'm always grateful they are here, but I have always been envious of nearly every other place I travel to ride bikes. They have more trails going into more places and are always working at building new trails. Canada , Whitehorse specifically, has been working on trail development for years, and it seems we have the same few trails we have always had. Yet, we have the most space, and could have world class trail systems here. I'm all for trail development. E bikes should only be allowed for people over 50, I'll get one someday. I don't think their use on the trails is a negative thing at all, and don't think they do damage, unless the user rides off into the tundra (saw a dude post videos of himself doing that.) I think they are fine though.. thanks
