Comments: I strongly oppose this proposal to target large trees on public land. I believe the forest service's proposal to eliminate the protection of large trees only benefits the timber industry. A healthy ecosystem, like much of eastern Oregon's National Forest, is home to a variety of sensitive species that are large tree dependent. When I have walk through wooded areas throughout our country I am always thankful for the opportunity to stand next to a large tree that has been rooted in one place. Our back country should be protected to allow for future generation of wildland adventures to admire all living things young and old.
