Comments: I'm a Mountain Biker that likes to work hard, to enjoy the fruits of my labor. I won't ride a trail that doesn't have an awesome downhill. I'm also a rider that likes to share my rides with friends, new and old. We understand that these trails are meant to be shared with other people and all their friends. What I have, personally, saw is that most people want to "share the trail" in a polite manner. Lately, we have had a lot of issues with general courtesy and trail etiquette. Mostly, from E-Bike users. Good for them, they are out, they are riding, they are enjoying the outside. But Damn me for just being out there in their world.... And if that attitude is going to come with an E-Bike, I don't want to have anything to do with them. Life is too short, and our trails are too awesome to be ruined by someone who doesn't say hello back. Or give uphill travel the right a way. Or pick up after themselves at a trailhead. Or cope an attitude when we are riding on a trail that has a fast decent, in a group, pulled over to allow them to pass.(We gave up a RAD ride, to be disrespected?!) My crew rides with respect for the trail, our community, and fellow adventures. We will not be open for an E-Bike invasion and the rider that comes with it. If you can't earn em, to turn em.... You need a new hobby!
