Comments: As an avid outdoorsman and cyclist, I've spent considerable time on forest service trails both on foot and on bike. I've also used both ebikes and non ebikes in a multitude of state and federal land. Class one ebikes require assistance from the rider in order to transmit additional power. I've seen no issues at all with these bikes as compared to a non-ebike as they do not tear up the trail or cause any other negative impact to the environment/other trail users or wildlife. They do, however, allow more people to enjoy our forests and increase the amount of income and stewardship as a result.
