Comments: As a visitor to many national forests and parks, I definitely object to allowing any motorized vehicles, including bikes, in these National treasures. There are plenty of places people can ride bikes. Limiting their access to wild places does not keep them from riding in more suitable locations. The right to have forests and parks remain as natural as possible for the sake of those environments and the wildlife living there weigh at least as much as the right of people to ride e-bikes. Because people don't actually have to work to ride e-bikes, they will go farther and do more damage than regular bikes.
