Comments: I am for the project. I don't understand the resistance for the reason it will adversely affect salmon. They are opening up the river where it has been blocked for decades to breeding grounds. Precautions are being taken to control spills into the river. That can only increase salmon population and add a breeding area that is presently not there for diversification. There are Environmental people and groups opposing this mine completely no matter the precautions should be taken with a grain of salt. The mine is currently and will continue to cure past environmental damage. Who else is or will do that. Who will open the river for example? Has anyone stepped forward to do this in the decades the river has been blocked, including those groups who oppose it? The answer is no one.
