Comments: Wilderness designation should stay as wilderness. Humanity does not need easy access to every spot on the planet. Electric bikes can move fast and regular mountain bikes are bad enough coming behind a hiker unexpectedly bouncing on and off trail. Electric bikes are in fact motorized-the rider uses the electric motor to propel the machine and the rider. If you have ever been in any national park where bikes are allowed-hiking quietly in the silence to be startled by a herd of cyclists coming upon you unexpectedly is very scary and frankly ruins any peaceful experience as one is frequently startled and can no longer enjoy the trail. I would expect lizards and other ground dwelling plants and animals would be run over quite easily owing to the speed and lack of detailed attention of a cyclist. Please withdraw this consideration. Please work to keep our wilderness truly wild.
