Comments: I do not have an e-bike. If I did I would limit it to the street because I think it is comparable to a street bike. Most people ride in eBay to make it easier on themselves physically. If e-bikes are allowed on trails, more people will be there with their e-bikes. I think the current structure where a person has to work to get their bike up a trail that might be a little steep is a good thing, it discourages those people that aren't avid riders for the sport to do it in their neighborhood. I don't want this ruling to change, I think it should be strictly all natural, either you hike or you bike using your physical strength. I think also over time it will put double the wear and tear on trails that it normally would have. Also the trails that I hike on may turn into e-bike pass where you'll have all ages congesting the path, and make it hard for hikers. E-bikes should not be allowed on any hiking or biking trails.
