Comments: Quite frankly, I don't understand why this is even an issue. Motorized is motorized, period. More than once I have experienced an e-biker coming upon me extremely fast while quietly hiking a "non-motorized" trail and this just shouldn't be happening. There are thousands of miles of trails that are currently designated for motorized travel which the e-biker could easily use. Also, I have seen on various youtube videos, e-bikers simply cruising up mountains on NO designated trails causing damage to the delicate terrain. People need to slow down their pace of life when visiting these special places. Allowing more trails to be opened to e-bikers only encourages trail destruction to happen much faster which will then require more maintenance and, therefore, more expense.
