Comments: As someone who spends a great deal of time enjoying our public lands, and an avid cyclist, I strongly oppose allowing ebikes on national forest trails. They are incompatible with other cyclists, walkers, and the animals who live in the forests. The ability to go faster for longer, encourages those who use ebikes to go deeper into the wilderness where they disrupt ecosystems and alter the natural environment and the experience for every living creature. There are abundant trails already available for the use of ebikes and there is no compelling reason to allow them to expand into the national forests.

Please consider the experience of the vast majority of those who enjoy these trails and do not permit ebike use in these beautiful and treasured public lands.
