Comments: In my experience, it is incredibly dangerous to allow any bikes on National Forest trails, let alone bikes powered by motors. I personally have been nearly collided into by a mountain bike that came shooting over a hill on a horse-only designated trail. Fortunately, my horse jumped aside and avoided the impact. If I had been on foot, I would have been killed by that bike rider. There have been many incidents of riders being injured by mountain bikes. Allowing e-bikes will only further put hikers and horseback riders at risk. Did you learn nothing from the mountain bike rider who collided into a grizzly bear? The proposal to allow e-bikes should be denied.
