Comments: I am a native Idahoan and return to the state often to enjoy its natural beauty, patronize outdoor businesses, and bring family and friends to quiet, pristine wilderness. The sanctity of Idaho's natural environment is key to its economy and quality of life. Whatever money we get from a mine we are stealing from the people who make a living and a life within this landscape. Whatever meat term benefits we see, we are creating long term destruction. So many other places have looted their natural environments and left scraps for the people who remain. Let Idaho learn from their mistake and pursue long term environmental and economic resilience through stewarding its valuable natural places.
