Comments: Having owned a home in Yellow Pine for almost 50 years, we've seen mines come and go. The town is always more vibrant during the mining years. There is work for those who want it, the businesses do well. New friends are made. Some even buy homes and stay in the community. Yellow Pine seems an almost sleepy ghost town when the mines are closed. The mines have always been supportive of town projects, social events, maintenance projects, etc. They've proved to be good neighbors. Midas has been exceptionally good with all of the above plus great communication with the community.
