Comments: the people participating in this activity in the National forest have consistently shown that they do not behave responsibly. I have seen dozens of locations along Gold Camp Rd, Rampart Range Rd. and other forest service roads that are covered in trash and debris from target shooting. Cans, beer bottles, couches, TVs, shell casings, and just about anything else that can be shot at is littering the forest near any place you can park a pickup truck along the side of the road. At most locations, trees are used as targets too. The shooters shoot at the trees until they fall down. I have had problems being shot towards too. while hiking, I have had bullets fly overhead. Not all areas are suitable for shooting as there are trails below them and stray rounds keep going. its very dangerous. Because the shooters have shown that they do not respect the land and resources and they are endangering other trail users, their activity should be confined to very specific areas.
