Comments: Closing the national forests to shooting near Colorado springs would make it so myself, and many others, don't have an inexpensive way to target practice. I utilize the national forests several times a month to practice, and not having a space to do that would put myself and my children at risk of not being prepared in an emergency situation. When we visit the forests, we make it a rule to not only clean up after ourselves but also from others before us. It's a never-ending task, but well worth it to enjoy shooting in our national forests.
