Comments: The number of sites and trails with debris and litter from unmanaged shooting has skyrocketed in the last decade in these areas. I used to target practice myself in Pike, but I stopped in 2015 after seeing how much trash was left in the forest (old targets, shells, casings, foam, etc). Even most campsites have this debris now. On two instances in Pike I found unused rounds mixed in with expended casings. This is unsafe for a number of reasons. As the population continues to grow around these forests, safety must also be taken in to account. As a trail runner I have also come very near gunshots by misguided shooters coming very near the hiking trails. Not all shooters are responsible and find appropriate backdrops for their target practice. I support a more managed shooting range model
