Comments: As I see it, this is one more means by which to commercialize our National Forests, for the benefit of a few. The last thing I want to hear while hiking the 10k trail or Ellis Trail is yelling and screaming in what should be a experience in nature. You can say that skiing in this same area generates the same amount of noise. I disagree. I traveled to the Royal Gorge in Southern Colorado a few years back, they have turned that place into one huge commercial tourist trap with bungee swings. The screams from those people could be heard for MILES! The Sandias already suffer from overuse, and trash everywhere, why increase an already overburdened environment? Oh, yeah, I forgot, money.
