Comments: While I understand the desire to increase tourism to New Mexico, rapid growth, development, and consumption isn't the best option. The crown jewel of New Mexico is it's wild places, and making them more accessible is valuable, but making them theme parks isn't the way to go about this. As each year is drier and drier, as snowpack melts faster than ever, as the Rio Grande dries in Albuquerque and Socorro, as the fear of wildfires grows every year, our solution is to build a theme park in the middle of one of our only forests in the Albuquerque area. It's silly, it's irresponsible, and it seems like a waste of economic resources and a waste of precious natural resources.
