Comments: Yeah, I really don't think that we need to put a Euro-Disney on The Sandias. Folks will go to Uncle Cliffs over a one' ride amusement park. The Tramway is charming. Now if it's a slip-and-slide from somebody's nightmares -- people will come out here from Ohio, like swallowing a Carolina Reaper, you know? Ok man -- but unless there is an achievement, I don't want The Sandias answer to Euro-Disney. Those hills are pretty and I don't want a derelict, neon crackhouse mucking up the view when they go under. It sounds like horsepucky.

Dang. Do we want to sell that hill to Arbys? How much does a Sandia boulder cost? Sell it off -- piece by piece. Worlds Biggest Apartment Complex! Come see the first ferris wheel which was built on a rocky slope! This used to be a national park -- now it has cotton candy. We sold it off. There are mimes instead of coyotes. Please visit the gift shop -- there are commemorative plaques which show what a real yucca looked like. Nah.

The Tramway might have a car with a glass floor and the thrill would last longer. We could have a slide system which goes down one of the arroyos, to get people to work and blow some minds that way -- no more mucking with The Sandias.
