Comments: This project represents the unavoidable conflict between the importance of freeing forest lands with our native species from invasive plants and the importance of not using herbicides such as glyphosate that harm a vast range of species including us humans. I am apprehensive about the extent to which such poisonous chemicals are being posited as the basis of the method of handling the problem. I appreciate that the area involved is very large and that many of the species are very aggressive, such as knotweed, but I am deeply concerned about the serious harm that the noxious herbicides will do to a large range of species, plant and animal, including humans and especially children.
