Comments: The Boggy Draw trail system is a valuable asset to both the economical and physical/mental well being of the surrounding communities. People come from all over the world to camp and enjoy the trails here. I have no problem with science based, respectful management of the national forests but I've seen what happens in reality when these areas are logged and it's usually very ugly and permanent in the long term.

Many members of the community have put in long, hard hours to build these trails and they and the areas around them should be preserved. There's no need to destroy cherished public recreation areas and impact people's ability to enjoy and escape to the outdoors.
