Comments: Nature determines who lives and who dies in the wild. A human being is not qualified to decide how many of what species (natural to the area) is to have their freedom of choice.

Predators eat prey animals. Those who are in excellent health are rarely brought down because all they need to do is to outrun the slowest prey animal. Therefore, the fittest survives to pass on their genes.

A national forest is a wildland, correct? Treat it as such.

Stop with the boardroom mentality syndrome.
